For this year’s top 10 travel destinations for the Thanksgiving holiday, eight domestic cities remain the same, with New York once again claiming the top spot. With reasonable holiday airfare prices compared to other cities on the list, Chicago makes its debut on this year’s list and pushes Phoenix out of the top five. New York, Orlando, and Denver rounded out the top three, with New York and Denver falling into the same ranking positions as last year despite increased airfare to both cities.

Thanks to a decrease in airfare, London makes a big jump to second place on this year's list while Aruba takes fourth. Almost half of this year's list includes all new destinations, including Punta Cana, Managua, Lima and Puerto Vallarta, proving how Latin America is becoming a top travel destination this year.
